Manet's Woman with Fans (1873) — Northwestern Art Review. (2025, April 15). Northwestern Art Review. Retrieved November 11, 2025, from https://www.northwesternartreview.org/articles/manets-woman-with-fans-1873

I selected a piece of art from the 19th-century French artist Manet, Édouard. This piece is an oil on canvas called Woman with Fans. (Manet's Woman With Fans (1873) — Northwestern Art Review, 2025) This painting is of a woman who is presumed to be named Nina de Callias, a well-known Parisian salon hostess. She is seated in an interior richly decorated with Japanese fans that fill the background like a collage. I chose this because the woman is excluding this feeling of modern femininity, a sense of comfort and confidence. These themes correlate perfectly with my pop-up “silhouettes and sax.” Nina is surrounded by rich textures, patterns, and cultural influence, much like the guests at the pop-up who will be surrounded by music, movement, and intimate design. This helps further the design experience by pulling inspiration from art history and executing it into a modern interior design and vibe.

The Event

The pop-up I will be creating is called Silhouettes & Sax to promote a lingerie brand. It will be an event held at an intimate and moody jazz bar offering free drinks, live music, and take-home lingerie. The target audience will be influencers and girls in their 20s, looking to have a fun night where they can take pictures and listen to good music. There will be lingerie showcased for free in little bags at every seat. I chose to make the seating very intimate and cozy, almost as if it's a couch, so guests are comfortable and have options for pictures and spaces to relax. There will also be an interactive bar that has hands coming out serving drinks and bras. Alongside the wall will be fun dancers dressed up in the brand's attire and setting the vibe for the night. It will also be encouraged to wear the brand's lingerie in a fun way to the event, and there will be tons of opportunities to capture content for TikTok and Instagram. I also added a photobooth so alongside the goodbag guests can take home a picture souvenir as well!
